BUILD. TRUST. NO LIMITS.

IMPACT STRATEGIES HAS ADDED THREE NEW STAFF MEMBERS.

Clayton Rehkemper as Project Manager, and Lucas Theising and Zackary Barnes as Project Engineers.

Project Manager Clayton Rehkemper joined the IMPACT Strategies team in May. He holds a bachelor's degree in Construction Management from Western Illinois University. Rehkemper has 6 years of experience in the construction industry, having previously served in roles including Project Engineer, Assistant Project Manager, and Project Manager. Clayton and his fiancé live in Trenton, IL.

Originally from Germantown, IL, Project Engineer Lucas Theising recently graduated from Southern Illinois University-Carbondale with a degree in Technical Resource Management/Construction Management after earning an associate degree from Kaskaskia College. Theising completed an internship with IMPACT Strategies in 2021.

Zackary Barnes is another former IMPACT Strategies intern who is returning to the firm as a Project Engineer. He holds a degree in Construction Project Management from Kaskaskia College. Barnes, who lives in Carlyle, IL, interned with IMPACT in 2021.

Scott Manning, Director of Construction Operations at IMPACT Strategies said, "We are thrilled to welcome Clayton, Lucas, and Zackary to the IMPACT Strategies team. Clayton is an excellent construction project manager who will bring our clients the high level of service they've come to expect from our firm. Lucas and Zackary continually impressed us during their internships – we couldn't be happier to have them back full-time as project engineers."

HOLLAND CONSTRUCTION SERVICES HIRES SCOTT HENDRICKS AS VICE PRESIDENT OF INDUSTRIAL

Holland Construction Services is proud to announce it has hired Scott Hendricks to serve in the newly created position of Vice President of Industrial. Hendricks has spent nearly two decades in the construction industry, including an earlier stint at Holland in the pre-construction department. His experience includes pre-construction and estimating, project development, and client relations.

Holland's President Mike Marchal said they decided to create this position based on the increasing amount of industrial construction work Holland is managing, including the most recent project for Volpi Foods' new 87,000-square-foot meat slicing and packaging facility.

"Scott's return to Holland has been a blessing for our team," said Marchal. "Scott was with us for seven years and has since amassed a wealth of knowledge and expertise around not just the industrial market, but the construction business in general. We are excited to have Scott's leadership to grow our industrial division and to help us provide an even better experience for all our clients."

Comparing his experience in the industrial market to that of the multi-family market, for example, Hendricks said there are several differences in time and resources when it comes down to building an industrial property versus a multi-family property. The average multi-family project takes 18 months to two years to complete, whereas an industrial warehouse can be built in as little as six months, with less staff. Hendricks said his role will allow for more growth within the industrial market.

"My goal in this role with Holland is to use my connections with industrial construction teams across the country to grow, maintain and expand Holland's relationships," said Hendricks. "The industrial market is growing, and Holland Construction Services is rapidly expanding into new markets. My role will be client-focused and work on coordinating projects between the operations team and the developer."

Hendricks will be working in Holland's new St. Louis office which is set to open this fall. He is one of 25 new team members Holland Construction Services has added this year, with another 15 expected to be added by the end of 2022. The company has reached several milestones this year including record revenue and a record number of new employees.

HOYLETON YOUTH AND FAMILY SERVICES BECAME A CERTIFIED CARE AGENCY IN MAY 2022

Hoyleton achieved this accreditation by meeting Cornell University's Residential

Child Care Project's highest standard for implementation of the Child and Residential Experiences (CARE) program model. This trauma-informed, principle-based program model represents a new approach for residential child and youth care work. There are only 13 social services agencies in the world and only 10 in the United States, who are CARE certified.

When this principle-based, trauma-informed program model was adopted back in 2017, the staff at Hoyleton had no idea the evolution the entire agency would experience as a result. Hoyleton embraced the knowledge, research and rationale of CARE and as staff began to implement changes, based on six core principles, they realized the benefits spoke to everyone at every level of the organization, not just direct care staff in the residential program. "The work we have done to get to this point has changed the way we engage in our work and will determine where we are able to go tomorrow," said Hoyleton President and CEO, Chris Cox.

Recognizing and understanding individual beliefs and experiences is the foundation for the changes that were implemented as a result of the CARE model. The agency learned the importance of understanding one another through individual lenses. We all have different beliefs, life experiences and thought processes which contribute to very individualized reactions or decision-making. The CARE model provided the tools needed to step back and evaluate challenges in youth care which led to better decisions, processes and outcomes. Long standing hard fast rules and regulations were eliminated as staff explored the "why" and "how" in each situation. By utilizing the six core principles identified in the CARE model which are; developmentally focused, family involved, relationship based, trauma informed, competence centered, ecologically oriented Hoyleton direct care staff members were able to understand why a certain behavior was happening as well as how to change the situation to improve the outcome.

The CARE model provides a developmentally focused framework to keep relationships at the center to help guide the work being done in youth care. A person looking through the CARE lens asks, "is this person willing and able to proceed with what is needed?" If the answer is yes you can proceed without issue but if a person is not willing and/or not able a variety of steps can be taken to modify the task as well as the goal to get to a better outcome. Results from this process have been so favorable that the principles were applied at every level at Hoyleton.

The CARE model now guides all interactions with clients, their families and our staff, plus it has shaped administrative processes. CARE training provided common-language to address challenges in other areas of the agency and is now the foundation for continued growth as a human services agency. As a certified CARE agency Hoyleton staff members step into the communities they serve and say, "what is my role and how can I make a difference?" They are equipped with proven effective tools and knowledge to continue their mission of enabling all people to realize the wholeness of life that God intends. 4 Solid Strategies for Expanding Your Professional Network

by Bassam Kaado

<https://www.businessnewsdaily.com/4363-tips-build-professional-network.html>

It's crucial to build your personal brand and network like a pro in today's business world. Here's how to do it.

Professional networking means deliberately creating and maintaining relationships with others who can help you further your career or personal brand.

Many networking tools, including apps and websites, can help you build successful relationships. Networking best practices include being prepared, being honest and following up.

This article is for professionals, job seekers, and entrepreneurs who want to grow their networks and relationships to maximize their brands and careers.

If you ask anyone how they got where they are today, you'll quickly learn that many successful business professionals have connections. These connections, however, were likely not handed to them. Instead, they were forged through successful professional networking.

You can only get so far by yourself; the reality is that professional progression and opportunities are driven by the relationships you build. "Business revolves around people, and it is driven by relationships, which affect every aspect of business, from sales to recruitment," said Yiannis Gavrielides, CEO of Covve. "It is therefore important for us all to build and maintain real professional relationships."

We'll explore strategies for expanding your professional network to help build your brand, grow your business and achieve your career goals.

Strategies to expand your professional network

Professional networking requires initiative. You have to make an effort to meet people and then establish and maintain those relationships. "Networking is a deliberate activity to build, reinforce and maintain relationships of trust with other people to further your goals," wrote Anders Ostlund, founder of networking site Fryday, on Medium.

Today, as social media changes business tactics, you can network by sending an invitation on LinkedIn or following a contact on Twitter. But with increased accessibility, it's more essential than ever to build your personal brand and network like a pro.

Here are four ways to grow your professional network:

Use your LinkedIn profile to grow your professional network. Social media sites, particularly LinkedIn, have changed the professional networking landscape. Many people rely on their LinkedIn network for referrals, introductions, reviews and references – all of which come in handy when you are looking for a job or hiring new team members, said Michael Brown, a career consultant and author of Fresh Passion: Get a Brand or Die a Generic.

You can use LinkedIn for business in several important ways:

Add to your professional contacts. Brown recommends adding anyone you deal with professionally to your LinkedIn network. Even if your contact with these people was brief, they might become valuable allies in the future.

Learn about people in your industry. LinkedIn is a great space to learn about people's professional and educational backgrounds. If you have a meeting with someone coming up, read their profile to find similarities and conversation topics, advised Tyler Whitman, a licensed real estate agent at Triplemint. Whether it's for a job interview, sales call or alumni networking event, having talking points shows that you've made an effort to learn about the person and increases your likelihood of making a good first impression.

Recruit team members. A LinkedIn page can help your company find and recruit top talent so you can improve your hiring process and find team members who align with your mission and values.

Promote your business. LinkedIn's marketing features make it an excellent business promotion tool, enabling you to grow your relationships with consumers.

Ask for introductions to meet new professional contacts.

Don't be afraid to ask someone in your professional network to introduce you to someone they know, Brown advised. Most people are happy to facilitate connections or even become mentors who help you enrich your professional relationships.

You can also ask for help from a networking “wingman.” It can be awkward to brag about yourself to a stranger, Whitman said, but a friend can talk up your successes and achievements – and you can do the same for them.

Keep in touch to nurture professional relationships.

Networking is not a one-and-done deal where you meet a contact and then speak with them only when you need something. If you really want to connect, nurture a sustainable, give-and-take relationship.

“After meeting someone, assuming there is rapport, I make sure I stay in touch,” Gavrielides said. “Staying in touch with people requires effort, and it is important to regularly reengage ... I feel that conversations must be natural, but the effort to reengage must be conscious, as we are all too busy to do it effortlessly.”

Ostlund noted that while social media sites are an excellent way to begin relationships, authentic professional relationships require in-person meetings to build depth. Trust is hard to develop without the personal interaction involved in face-to-face conversation.

Never stop looking for opportunities (but do it right).

Focus on growth and think about the people you encounter daily, Brown said. Grab a business card or search for them on LinkedIn if there is any chance you can call on them professionally in the future.

Keep in mind that you shouldn't network selfishly, Whitman advised. Create a foundation first; learn about the other person and tell them about you. Once there's a foundation, it's OK to ask for something, but don't jump the gun and ask for favors outright.

“Networking should be authentic and should be part of both our business and professional lives,” Gavrielides said. “We are naturally social beings and should ensure we socialize rather than engage in forced exchange. The relationships I built along the way are now customers, suppliers, partners, colleagues, investors ... [and] many are close friends.”

Professional networking tools

A comprehensive networking plan is essential, and software apps can help with that. We've already discussed LinkedIn, but you should consider adding a few other tools to your professional networking arsenal.

Discord: Launched in 2015, Discord is a small business chat tool initially designed to help gamers talk globally. The app has exceeded its original purpose and is used by all types of businesses, influencers and brands. Discord offers users a dedicated server for instant messaging, audio chats and video chats without any extra costs. The app is an excellent resource for reaching out to your community and engaging with your audience.

Bumble Bizz: Bumble Bizz is a spinoff of the dating app Bumble. It was established in 2017 as a way to create professional networking opportunities. Bumble Bizz uses the same location-based data as the dating app to encourage local business relationships. It's an excellent tool for making business matches at your pace on a more personal level.

WhatsApp: What started as an alternative to SMS in 2009 is now a free, end-to-end-encrypted messaging, calling and video chat app used by more than 2 billion people in over 180 countries. WhatsApp's accessibility makes it a crucial tool for networking and keeping in touch with people worldwide. Brands like Adidas and Absolut Vodka use the app to market to their audiences, while other companies use WhatsApp for customer service.

Twitch: Launched in 2011, Twitch focuses on video game livestreaming, esports competitions and various streaming options. The Amazon subsidiary has experienced massive growth and is praised for its community-building quality. Its streaming reach has made it an attractive platform for companies and provides a unique tool for small businesses, which are 74% of the companies using Twitch.

TikTok: Popular social media app TikTok is a platform for short-form videos used for various purposes, from entertainment to education. Like Twitch, TikTok business features promote community interaction, including the ability to make video responses to comments that can be used to answer questions. Also, the app allows people to make videos that build off others, called duets. Businesses are starting to gravitate to the app, and it's only the beginning of its business potential.

Meetup: The Meetup website gives people the opportunity to, well, meet up. As the name indicates, the site lets users create social or business groups, including networking events. To adapt to the pandemic, Meetup added streaming capabilities. It can be a great tool for expanding your business.

Professional networking dos and don'ts

With both online and in-person networking, remember that it takes effort to succeed and grasp potential opportunities.

Do ...

Be prepared for meetings. Being ready means dressing for the action, making eye contact and using a firm handshake. Another element of being ready is ensuring people can keep in contact. For in-person meetings, have business cards ready with all your necessary contact information. For online networking events, have a LinkedIn profile, website and portfolio ready to share.

Have honest conversations. It's easy to tell when people are putting up a front or being disingenuous, so authenticity is essential. People appreciate honesty and openness, so approach everyone as if you want to be friends. When talking to people, be clear and concise so you aren't dominating the conversation.

Follow up. It's crucial to follow up with any connections you make at a networking event. Sending thank-you notes is one way to do this. Additionally, if someone gives you advice on getting ahead and finding opportunities, be sure to look into their recommendations.

Don't ...

Put people on pedestals. Everyone at a networking event is a person and deserves the same amount of respect. Try not to be intimidated by someone in a position of power or fame. Also, don't try to flatter the person you're talking to or show you're a “superfan.” Most people want to have a genuine conversation.

Forget to listen. Being present in the conversation is a recipe for success, and understanding that the networking event isn't just for you is a bonus. You'll be tempted to say your piece or jump into a conversation, but you want encounters to have a natural flow. Whether it's a one-on-one conversation or a group meeting, listen to whoever is speaking and take in what they're saying. The speaker can usually tell if people are actively listening, and they appreciate it when someone values their time and knowledge.

Get discouraged by rejection (or fear of it). Don't let the idea of rejection scare you off the path. Even if you go to just one networking event, you'll interact with many people, and not everyone will be a fit for your professional network. You'll have plenty of opportunities to connect. Don't be afraid to introduce yourself. Be kind and courteous. Ask questions. The more you put yourself out there, the more chances you'll have to find strong connections.
