

Remember to Be Kind

AS businesses re-open, please make an effort to be patient and understand most of them are implementing new procedures, safety measures and operations.

Be Patient.

Business are adapting to a new way of operating. Many are voluntarily short-staffed to keep YOU safe.

Eat and Go.
Restaurants have limited space. Don't linger - eat and go so they can serve more customers. Be kind to your server and don't forget to TIP!

Be Kind.

Changes are necessary to ensure everyone's safety. Follow the guidelines. Social distance. Wash your hands and don't come out if sick.

Be Respectful.
Masks are required in many places - don't judge, and don't complain. Do your part to keep everyone safe.

St. Clare Church re-opens to public; building addition under way

St. Clare Parish re-opened its doors for public Masses with a “welcome home” theme – after 12 weeks of Masses without a congregation during the quarantine. Parishioners attending also had a chance to see the construction under way for the additions to the church.

“It is with genuine joy that I am able to say, ‘welcome back’ to our parish family,” said Father Jim Deiters, St. Clare pastor. “We’ve been given permission now to have Masses open to a congregation, and we are thrilled to be back open. We also respect those who are not ready to return or feel ‘at risk,’ and thus, we will continue to offer live stream Mass at 10:30 each Sunday.”

As with other Catholic churches in Illinois, St. Clare Church is now following the bishops’ and state’s safety protocols for re-opening to the public after being closed at the start of the coronavirus pandemic

“Our return to church this weekend also gave people a chance to see the progress we are making on the addition to our fellowship hall and the new wing for offices and meeting rooms,” Deiters noted. “The construction began right as we started the quarantine for the pandemic, so our parishioners were not able to watch the progress weekly as we had planned. Many people were surprised to see how far along we are on this exciting project.”

During the week, the church continues to be a beehive of construction activity. The project includes desperately needed parish offices and meeting rooms attached to the west wing of the current church -- with a new close-in circle drive for better access to the building – and an expansion of the church’s fellowship hall, kitchen and storage space to the east. Foundations are complete and exterior walls are going up this week.

“The building project shows optimistic signs of growth for our parish, as well as construction jobs to boost our local economy,” Deiters said. “We are truly blessed by the continued prayers and financial support for the project.”

The addition is expected to be completed in October. The Korte Company is the general contractor for the project.

St. Clare Mass schedule
5 p.m. Saturday
8:30 and 10:30 a.m. Sunday
Noon Monday and Thursday
7:30 a.m. Tuesday and Friday

At this time, parishioners and visitors must follow safety protocols by wearing masks inside the church and following the social distancing rules. Hand sanitizers will be provided, and masks will be available for people who forget to bring one.

In addition, Mass will continue to be livestreamed at 10:30 a.m. Sundays for those who do not yet feel comfortable attending Mass.

Illinois Minimum Wage Increase

January 1, 2020, the Illinois minimum wage increased from $8.25/hour to $9.25/hour ($5.55/hour for tipped employees). The second increase is effective July 1, 2020 and will be:

- $10.00/hour
- $6.00/hour for tipped employees
- $8.00/hour for those under the age of 18 working fewer than 650 hours per year

Employees Entitled to Leave Because Camp is Closed? Yes.

Contributed by Suzannah Wilson Overholt, July 2, 2020

After schools and day cares closed in the spring due to the pandemic, employers and parents alike were hopeful that summer would bring a return to normalcy – especially in the form of camp for kids. Alas, that hope has not become a reality as many states have either delayed or prohibited the opening of camps. What are employers and working parents to do?

On June 26, the federal Department of Labor issued guidance stating that, under certain circumstances, an employee whose child's day camp is closed as a result of COVID-19 may take leave under the Families First Coronavirus Response Act (FFCRA).

The Paycheck Protection Program resumed accepting applications July 6, 2020, at 9:00 AM EDT in response to President signing the program's extension legislation. The new deadline to apply for a Paycheck Protection Program loan is August 8, 2020.

Paycheck Protection Program has reopened

Paycheck Protection Program Loan Information

The Paycheck Protection Program is a loan designed to provide a direct incentive for small businesses to keep their workers on the payroll.

SBA will forgive loans if all employee retention criteria are met, and the funds are used for eligible expenses. Click here to read more about PPP loan forgiveness.

How To Apply

You can apply through any existing SBA 7(a) lender or through any federally insured depository institution, federally insured credit union, and Farm Credit System institution that is participating. Other regulated lenders will be available to make these loans once they are approved and enrolled in the program. You should consult with your local lender as to whether it is participating in the program. View a list of lenders participating in the Paycheck Protection Program by state.

If you wish to begin preparing your application, you can download a copy of the PPP borrower application form (revised June 24, 2020) to see the information that will be requested from you when you apply with a lender.

Cybersecurity Tips for Working From Home

By Andrew Martins | Business News Daily

Many Americans are now working from home, making video conference calls, uploading documents and conducting their daily business online. But experts are wondering if the remote nature of work could cause extra internet security concerns down the road.

While most workers are used to working at the office under carefully crafted IT systems, it's impossible to quantify the number of permutations of home internet setups. Where one household could have a simple solution that works for their family, another household could have a virtual private network (VPN) subscription in place to mask their internet usage from prying eyes.

To help you reduce the security risks you may be taking while working from home, we've collected some tips from experts on steps you can take to fortify your digital workspace.

Potential cybersecurity weaknesses in remote workspaces

When businesses were asked to work remotely unless they were essential, most companies were left unprepared for the sudden shift. As a result, many Americans are working on personal devices. While that may cause some level of convenience and familiarity, most people's personal computers, smartphones and other devices aren't secure beyond a simple antivirus program or firewall. Conversely, most devices used in a professional setting are made secure by a company's IT department, if it has one. Without keeping up with software patches and using the company's VPN for further security, data can be intercepted over the internet.

Last month, the issue was so worrisome to experts that the International Association of IT Asset Managers (IAITAM) warned government agencies, businesses and other organizations of the risks involved with letting employees work from home without secure devices.

"Many companies were caught unprepared when cities and states issued mandatory stay-at-home rules," said Barbara Rembiesa, president and CEO of IAITAM. "Now, the rubber is going to meet the road when those companies, which are struggling not to be crippled by COVID-19, try to keep the cash flowing by having employees at home call or email for credit card information, print out invoices on untracked home computers, and send them out on personal Wi-Fi networks."

With that sort of data flowing through unprotected methods, Rembiesa warned, companies will be threatened by "breaches and fraud on a scale never before seen."

"Use of personal devices creates problems around document preservation matters and add increased risk," wrote Brenda R. Sharton, a litigation partner and global chair of Goodwin's Privacy + Cybersecurity practice, in an article for the Harvard Business Review. "In addition, the software powering some home equipment can be months or even years out of date."

If you're working on a family computer, data security may be even harder to obtain, since the habits of other people in the house also affect your work's sensitive data. If they access a shady website or download a malware-laden file, your important data can be put immediately in jeopardy.

In fact, a recent study out of Italy showed that phishing attacks jumped by 40% as the coronavirus crisis boiled over. According to cybersecurity company ESET, it took just seven hours for them to detect "2,500 infections from malicious emails that played on COVID-19 themes."

Such vulnerabilities could get worse since certain industries, like healthcare and education, deal in federally regulated information that require that sensitive files be handled in a certain manner. If that data were to get in the wrong hands, that could spell trouble not just for the company but for the individual whose data was leaked. Any businesses with European clientele also have to consider the ramifications of violating the E.U.'s General Data Protection Regulation measures, which could come with huge noncompliance fines.

"It is no longer business as usual. 'Stay-at-home' orders ensure that secure payments and billing procedures are nearly impossible," said Rembiesa. "Remote employees are not trained on data privacy regulation and risk exposing sensitive information to a data breach. Without proper IT asset management, there are major dangers that must be mitigated."

Steps you can take to secure your data

While the consequences of poorly securing data while working from home can have severe impacts on your customers and your company, there are steps you can take to ensure the worst doesn't happen.

- Update your network security. While you should really do this on a regular basis, making sure your devices are completely up to date with the most recent security patches and upgrades can make a huge difference in securing your data. Things like your operating system, antivirus and antimalware programs, and your router are just some of the things you should immediately shore up and protect since those are generally your first and last defense against external threats.
- Avoid phishing emails. As previously mentioned, there are scammers out there using the COVID-19 crisis as a smokescreen for their nefarious attempts at your sensitive data. Phishing emails are a classic way they do that. In most cases, these emails may look like a business offer, a great deal, or even an important message from your boss, but in every instance, there's a link it says you must click. DO NOT CLICK IT UNLESS YOU KNOW WHO SENT THE LINK. Those links usually lead to a required download that installs malware onto your system, immediately compromising it in the process. Be on the lookout for odd email addresses, poor grammar or generic greetings that don't match the personality of the individual sending the email, and whatever you do – do not provide any personal information.
- Enable multifactor authentication. Passwords can be broken. It's just a matter of fact that humans have been codebreaking for as long as we've been making codes, so it only makes sense that there are programs out there now that can crack most passwords in moments. While practicing good password etiquette is a great first step, two-factor authentication adds an additional layer of protection, since it requires additional action beyond entering a password.

While a lot of these steps can be taken by the individual worker, companies should enact policies and take measures to further shore up their remote employees' defenses. "It is not too late for CEOs and others in charge of companies to take steps to get these risks under control, and to protect their data and that of their customers," Rembiesa said.

- Set up remote access. It may be significantly more difficult to do this without the physical devices in front of you or your IT department, but companies should do everything they can to establish remote access protocols. This may be particularly difficult to enact, however, as you'll likely need to access the onsite devices to issue multifactor authentication tokens.
- Reinforce confidentiality. The coronavirus outbreak has disrupted a lot of lives, and with people working in close proximity to their families, things can get hectic. Now is an important time to remind employees that while they work remotely, they have to maintain the same level of professionalism when it comes to secure and sensitive data as they do in the office. That includes reminding people that personal email is not to be used in an official capacity and that any physical documents kept at home must either be disposed of properly with a shredder or set aside to be shredded later.
- Update emergency contacts. If you can't reach employees via email, be it from a widespread power outage or if your company becomes the target of a cyberattack, having another way to reach your employees is paramount. This can be as easy as compiling a phone number list or setting up a secure way to message top personnel that circumvents any digital intrusion.

HEALTH & WELLNESS

BACKPACK SAFETY

Is your child's backpack too heavy?

- 80% of surveyed children said their backpacks are heavy
- 65% felt their backpacks caused fatigue
- 46% said they had back pain due to a heavy load

If your child leans forward to carry a backpack.... Its too heavy!! What can you do?

- Load the heaviest items closest to the child's back.
- Arrange books so they won't slide around in the backpack.
- Check what your child carries to school and brings home, sometimes things are unnecessary.

If the backpack is too loaded, your child can hand carry a book.
Use lightweight alternatives such as pocket folders instead of a three-ring binder.
NEVER let your child carry more than 15% of his/her body weight. If a child weighs 100 lbs. then they shouldn't carry a loaded backpack greater than 15 lbs.

How to properly wear a backpack:

- Both shoulder straps should always be worn.
- Choose a backpack with wide, padded straps.
- Do not sling the backpack over one shoulder.
- The pack should fit snugly to the child's back.
- Adjust the straps so that the bottom of the pack rests in the curve of the lower back.
- Don't bend over, instead squat, using both knees and keep the back in its normal inward curve.
- Never let the backpack rest more than 4" below the child's waistline
- Wear the waist belt in the backpack has on to evenly distribute the weight.

If your child complains of neck/back pain physical therapy can help. Physical therapists are trained to integrate strengthening exercises, posture education and manual techniques to help alleviate pain and keep your child moving.

Why Are Regular Spinal Checkups Important During Pregnancy?

With the change in our center of gravity and the extra weight we put on during pregnancy it is no wonder most of us have back pain. Our bodies change so quickly during pregnancy. Labor and delivery is stressful on the spine. After the birth we are bending and lifting as we care for our new baby. Your chiropractor can help you manage or prevent spinal problems resulting in the aches and pains through pregnancy and after the birth.

Make an appointment with your chiropractor today. Let us help you have a healthy pregnancy with less back pain.
